

The Soft Spark Starter

For romance authors who want to work smarter, flirt harder, and keep every drop of their creative soul.

Welcome, lovely!

You didn't start writing romance to spend your life trapped in admin hell or rewriting the same synopsis at 2 a.m. You started because stories are how you breathe.

So let's make space for that again.

Inside these pages are five prompts built to help you reclaim your hours without surrendering your voice. They're little spells, really - each one tuned to keep the machine in its lane while you stay at the heart of every sentence.

This isn't about outsourcing your imagination.

It's about teaching your AI to listen - to understand your rhythm, your wit, your boundaries - and then quietly handle the boring bits while you get back to being brilliant.

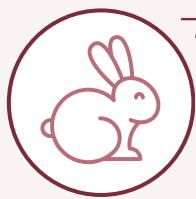

By the time you finish, you'll glimpse what happens when technology starts to sound like devotion instead of duty.

And if you want to go deeper? The next step is waiting for you inside The Sovereign Voice System, where we'll build your personal muse, not your ghostwriter.

Lovelaced - tools for romance authors and creative rebels. www.lovelaced.studio

#1: Plot Bunnies On Demand

“Give me three romance premise ideas built around [theme or trope]. Each should include a unique emotional hook, a high-stakes complication, and a one-line summary in my tone: [smart, sensual, and emotionally grounded].”

Why it works:

This keeps the AI in brainstorming mode—not drafting mode. You get inspiration without outsourcing creativity.

Make It Yours:

Add your personal brand keywords (“witty banter,” “slow-burn sensuality,” “neurospicy heroine”) to guide tone. Never ask for full scenes - you don’t need to because you’re a storyteller, not a typist.

#2: Character Confessional

“Interview my character, [Name]. Ask five emotionally revealing questions about their biggest fear, their secret desire, their self-sabotage, and what they’ll never admit to their love interest.”

Why it works:

Characters reveal themselves in conversation. Letting the AI interview them pulls out depth you can write into the story later - without it inventing plot.

Make It Yours:

Feed in your current manuscript’s tone and/or comparative titles. It’ll mirror your vibe better if you give it context (eg, “Think ‘The Hating Game’ meets Tessa Bailey”).

#3: Research Without The Doomscroll

“Summarize five quick facts about [topic] that a romance author might need for a scene, keeping it concise, contemporary, and easy to cross-check.”

Why it works:

It saves you the time sink of doomscrolling but keeps you in control of accuracy.

Make It Yours:

Use this as a starting point, not a citation. Double-check anything factual before it hits your manuscript.

#4: Marketing Minus The Ick

“Draft three Instagram caption outlines that promote [book or theme] in my voice: warm, confident, lightly flirtatious. Focus on emotional connection, not selling.”

Why it works:

AI is great at tone mimicry once it knows your boundaries. This prompt keeps it human and on-brand.

Make It Yours:

Feed it one of your real captions as an example before asking for new ones. It'll echo your natural phrasing instead of generic fluff.

#5: Dialogue Spark

“Give me three ways my characters could argue about [topic or scene moment], each showing different power dynamics and subtext. No full dialogue - just give me the emotional beats and one example line each.”

Why it works:

It gives you angles, not entire scenes. You still write the words, but the emotional scaffolding appears faster.

Make It Yours:

Ask for specific emotional tones (“tension with humor,” “quiet heartbreak,” “flirty defiance”) to get targeted inspiration.
